The Hog Law.

We print on the front page a co py of the Harrison County hop law enacted by the legislature of 1872-3, but which for some inexplicable reason has never been embodied in the Code, as it is pronounced by good lawyers to be the law of the land.

This will be the law in Edray district after the next meeting of the county court, the necessary p tition having been signed an made ready for presentation.

A more radical measure to pr down the hog nuisance could no be imagined, and the owner of th hog which has gotten out and done damage seems absolutely believe under the the law. A hog can ce stroy in a short time many times its own worth, and make the own i liable for all damages to real and personal property.

There is apparently one defec in the law in that it does not provide any way of fixing the amount of damage done. The damage a hog might do in rooting up sod or tearing down growing corn is hard to reduce to dollars and cents, and when the hogs are proceeded against in the summary manner provided, it will make the plaintiff put on his thinking cap to know how much of the proceeds to keep and how much to pay into the school fund.

Mill Stories.

Some of the primitive mills of this section were under discussion the other evening.

There is a mill in the extreme upper end of the county which has the reputation of making the best meal ever seen, but which has a capacity of only about two bushels a day. A gratified customer said to its owner: "You have got one of the most enterprising mills I ever saw. It no sooner grinds up one grain, than it backs, takes a Tunning start, and jumps on another, and keeps it up all day."

a gan he hitched his horse and confidence. descended to see what sort of and a stray hound eating the meal as it fell and barking up the spout for more.

In Webster county there is mill that is arranged so that a swift little stream works a pestle and mortar arrangement, pounding up the grain. The mill is a very ingenious affair and the mortar revolves between the strokes of the pestle to bring the grain in the proper place. One night it was set to work and a coon tried to eat the corn and was killed, and by morning the unfortunate animal was pounded into pulp.

A couple of timber men were visiting a man who lives near the Webster and Pocahontas line. He has a small burr mill and the cornbread for dinner was full of sand. He apologized for the defect, saying that he had filled the hopper with corn and started to Addison. He had been detained and the corn had all run out, and when he got back he found that the burrs had been grinding each other,hence the sand.

The last tale of the series comes from Randolph county, but sounds a good deal-like a "localized anecdote." A patron of a mill, such as we have been describing, was at the head of Tea Creek. worried waiting for his grist and be said:

"I could eat the meal as fast as you can grind it."

The Kind You Have Always Bought

Our fall and winter stock is now complete, and never before have we been able to present to our patrons so large and well assorted stock as we now have on hands. We have been told by many customers that no other store does as well by them as we do. We certainly try to excel. We have the facilities and the disposition, and no one else ought to be better able to satisfy a oustomer than we. By years of study and systematic practice we have-to some extent at least-worked over the problems of profitable buying, and this experience is as much to our customers' benefit as it is to ours. If you are not with us come to us; others have never regretted it, and neither will you. All we ask is to compare prices and qualities, and you will find we oan save you money. Very respectfully,
